"I love to put to work my skills, experience and energy for the benefit of my clients. I want to make a difference in the way I practice law, and help my clients make a difference in their community. When a person, nonprofit or business hires me I make it a point to understand not just a clients' immediate legal needs, but also the vision, philosophy and mission driving their organization or business. I strive to provide innovative and individualized solutions to each client's needs." Antonio "Tony" Arocho

Antonio will put to work for you his expertise and energy that includes many years of experience as a lawyer, working with nonprofits and trade associations, public service, federal and territorial court litigation, and executive management.

Antonio "Tony" Arocho has degrees from Seton Hall University School of Law (Juris Doctor) and Rider College (Bachelor of Science in Commerce in Business Administration). He is admitted to practice law in the District of Columbia, US Virgin Islands, US Court of International Trade, and US Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit.
